

2024 Oral Argument and Conference Dates

The table below shows the Supreme Court's schedule of dates for oral arguments and court conferences in calendar year 2024. The schedule is subject to revision.

Oral Arguments. If the court determines that oral argument will be held in a case, the court will notify the parties and will schedule the case on a specific day's oral argument list. If the court determines that oral argument will not be held in a case, the court will issue a final order deciding the appeal; the order will notify the parties of the court's conclusion that oral argument was not necessary. See Supreme Court Rule 18(1) and Comment.

Court Conferences. In addition to their day-to-day work reading briefs, preparing for oral arguments, and researching and writing opinions, the justices convene as a body on a regular schedule to deliberate and vote on matters before the court. A typical court conference includes, among other matters, the screening of discretionary appeals for acceptance or declination; the review and approval of orders and opinions deciding the merits of appeals; the consideration and disposition of motions for reconsideration; and the discharge of the court's administrative responsibilities to oversee the court system and to supervise the work of court committees.
